Plot Summary

"Flowers by Algernon" is a short story written by Daniel Keyes, which first appeared as a short narrative before being expanded into a novel. The story is presented through the perspective of Charlie Gordon, a man with an IQ of 68, who undergoes an experimental surgical procedure aimed at increasing his intelligence. The story documents Charlie's intellectual growth, emotional struggles, and eventual decline, illustrating the transient nature of artificially enhanced intelligence.

The narrative begins with Charlie's fascination with the world around him and his desire to become smarter. He works at a bakery and is eager to learn and be accepted by society. After undergoing the experimental surgery, Charlie's intelligence rapidly improves, allowing him to understand complex ideas, read extensively, and form deeper relationships.

However, as Charlie's intelligence surpasses that of others, he begins to notice the social prejudices and the superficiality of those around him. His relationships become strained, especially with those who once cared for him. Meanwhile, the experimental procedure's effects start to reverse, and Charlie's intelligence begins to decline, ultimately returning him to his original state.

Throughout the story, Charlie keeps a journal, which serves as a window into his evolving mind and emotional state. The story culminates with Charlie's realization of the transient nature of his intelligence and the tragic consequences of his pursuit of knowledge, symbolized poignantly by the image of Algernon, a mouse who underwent the same experiment and whose decline foreshadows Charlie's own.
